The Ogham script is the first alphabet of Europe, in which every letter is named for a tree or an important companion to trees. What is remarkable about Ogham is that the philosophy behind the language carries a way of thinking about the rebirth of the forest, namely, to consider how intimate the connection is between forests and humans. Legend says that when a young man named Oghma created the Ogham script, nature came calling, because all imagination – even scientific imagination ...

The Ogham alphabet is sometimes called the ' Gaelic Tree Alphabet ' or ' Celtic Tree Alphabet ' as each letter is assigned a tree or plant name. Perhaps this is because each of its characters, or ' trees ' is made out of a vertical reference line, known as a flesc (flaysk) that looks a little like a stem or trunk with one or more slashes, or twigs protruding from it.
